How technology can unleash childhood creativity and change the role of teachers The company is called SOASTA, which dubs itself A leader in cloud performance and testing There's some news today about the launch of the CloudTest platform, which is what, for the first time, allows automation to continuously test for multi-touch mobile applications. App gestures and cloud are all single things - it's a tech writer's paradise within news, though, as a couple of major trends, connected to the development of smartphones and tablet technology. SOASTA's technology is based on what's known as TouchTest, and the concept is capture and playback. If you own an iDevice or Android phone or tablet, the company confirmed earlier that when this type of test has tried optical techniques that are not precise enough to test this mobile app, and since its system lives on its own device, it can capture more details about the good movement of the user's fingertips. Replace the brittle light recognition method. There's also a Private Device Cloud system that lets you use a device you own to test. User experience from real devices around the world It's aimed at most organizations so that employee devices can be used with crowd-tested apps, so there's a system console as well as a real app testing system, all of which are very neat, and although Apple's very strict UI requirements mean it's difficult to find apps with a horribly clumsy interface to interact through touch, they certainly happen, and Android has a reputation for problems like this in the app. In addition, when the app is simple, accessible to hundreds or thousands of users, and is not particularly important (in terms of use, whether it's for business use or for more delicate situations, such as in a medical environment),. Then the way the interface works is incredibly unimportant, but as the app economy grows, people are increasingly reliant on apps to help them communicate, run their businesses, interact with customers, diagnose medical conditions and many other important applications. In these situations, having a precise and responsive UI is important in helping the app run or to keep customers satisfied, and so on. With tablets searching for more applications in home, business and education - with 2012 being a landmark year, it's possible. - We can also expect news. The app's courtesy of the App Store doesn't have time to flip through all the newspapers, but want to remain in the know? According to the Pew Research Center, more Americans are turning to digital outlets rather than newspapers, radios and even TVs for their news. Every day, there are apps and services designed to incorporate the latest news into the easy-to-consume digital version. One recent Facebook paper app has received a lot of buzz. It's beautifully designed and provides the best from your personal Facebook news feed, as well as news from other categories, including popular headlines. Paper launch puts me on a mission: to find the best news gatherer for you! What I found was that the best service has great content tailored to your needs. Here are some I would recommend: High design: paper (free app), in addition to being visually pleasing, Facebook's paper app is great for exploring stories from friends and news from around the world on your favorite topics. Nowadays, Paper offers curated content by their editors, so you may get a lot of news from their favorite publishers, such as Time or The New York Times. This amazing photo app is better at giving you control over the content you watch. You can determine the sources you want and practice closely on topics that interest you. It is provided in magazine form, so it feels neat and helps you become your own editor in chief. Smarter discovery: Zite (free app) Zite There's an impressive learning algorithm behind it, so the more you use it, the more you'll use it. While reading, you'll give the story a thumbs up or a thumbs down, so after a while you'll see what you want more. You may end up with something you want to read so much that you don't have time to get there all. Try using apps like Pocket to save content for offline reading later. Missed a cool water chat for the day? Don't worry - the duo behind Skimm offer a discussion topic worth cocktails in a simple sub-conversation tone. You think you're talking to your best friend, but you'll get the latest news from one former NBC News producer and do: Yahoo's news digest (free app). If you don't want to take the time to choose a category or select your source, yahoo's news digest is done for you. Twice a day, you get about 10 news stories selected from hybrid algorithms, editorial selection methods. It seems that new news gatherers will pop up every day — soon we'll need a gatherer to include them all! Tell us: How do you keep up with the news?
